

HOW TO USE THE FIRES IN BUILDINGS UNDER CONSTRUCTION MANUALS

There are two options for the use of the manuals. One is to combine the three manuals into a "Field Guide" for Construction Fire Safety Practices. The guide would be similar to the field guide that is on the Modern Fire Fighting website. Or, the other option is to keep the three separate. If the three are kept separate it is imperative that some sort of cover letter is added that explains "how the guide/manuals" are designed to be used.

It is important to note that these documents are intended to be used by individuals whose job is to provide safety training to the construction industry employees.

It is not the intent of the documents to provide all the information necessary for the development of a training course, but to act as a resource/guide to assist trainers in the development of fire safety curriculum that is specifically designed for their audience and their companies specific needs.

The documents are designed to present the issues primarily from the fire safety side of the issue. It is up to each individual instructor to tailor the program to fit their companies specific needs.
